Harvey Warner might have lost it.

His mind, that is.

His heart he just willingly gave away as soon as his eyes landed on the curvy chef working in her food truck outside of Eye Candy Ink one night.

In his defense, he's never been great at talking to women, but now that he's met the girl of his dreams, the stakes are higher than ever, so blurting out his name and the cheesiest pick-up line ever isn't a great start to their relationship.

The only saving grace is that the voluptuous chef seems to find his clumsy attempt at flirting endearing.

The pick-up lines shouldn't work on anyone, but somehow Coraline seems to kind of dig it.

Will pursuing Coraline ruin everything? Or will he finally get the happily ever after that he's been dreaming about ever since he first laid eyes on her?
