Embracing the Flux of Change

The Migrations Map of the Human Spirit also serves as a reminder that change is an inherent part of our existence. Just as the world around us is in constant motion, so too is our inner world. The human spirit is ever-evolving, continuously adapting to the ebb and flow of life's circumstances.

This little gift of a book is a map of the journeys we take each time we face a crossroads in life. Our choices become our adventures: to leap forward, look backward, root down, take flight, enter into relationship or go it alone. In these brief but profound writings, award-winning poet and memoirist Kara B. Imle tracks a path through the depths and heights of human love, madness, longing, laughter and spiritual awakening. These pieces show a deep kinship with the natural world and a wanderer's spirit that is always, within each journey, seeking home.

Though humans as a race gave up physical migration many centuries ago, there is a part of us that still longs for movement and change. Watching wild geese fly overhead, or witnessing the massive herds of caribou in the northlands and zebra, wildebeest and antelope on the African plains brings a thrill to our hearts. Something tickles us, itches us, irritates and yearns us. A far-off call. An urge to pull up stakes and move on.

That's what this book is about: the migrations we still take, both literal and figurative, spiritual and emotional; on hiking trails and back roads, across the water and here at home. Each time the reader returns for a dip into this book, he or she enters a world of spirit and nature. The poetry is a profound meditation on life, love, loss, and redemption. Short prose digs deeper into the mystery: the theory of relativity as discovered in the Hawaiian islands, the wonder of a universe contained in a drop of water, and the gorgeous tyranny of an endless summer day in the wilds of Alaska.

Imle's writing tracks the human journey through life, fearlessly addressing the profound, the difficult, the sublime, and yes, the ridiculous aspects of our shared situation. No one is entirely alone, yet perhaps one ever feels entirely understood. From falling in love to grieving a loss, everything is contained in these words. More than anything, this is meant as a gift from a human heart, to the heart of humanity. Whether you give it to your loved ones or to yourself, there is something in here for everyone.
