But when that man is convinced there's little good about him, life becomes a frustrating exercise. It's only now, after nearly twenty years in Charm City, that Raymond Conrad may have finally found his place.

Still fighting against isolation and his own rat-like tendencies, Conrad struggles between what he's sure is his true nature and the good person he longs to be.

Despite his best efforts to ignore it, his rat self always finds a way to break through. The problem is, he can't quite convince himself that's a bad thing.

Then he meets Calypso, the beautiful young woman who cares for the plants in his office. Although he can't imagine what she could possibly see in him, he wants her like crazy. But there's something about the headstrong Calypso that intrigues him beyond carnal knowledge. Could she be his ticket to something like happiness?

A whirlwind relationship lands Conrad right where he thought he wanted to be...until Calypso's secrets are revealed, throwing Conrad's plans for redemption into chaos.
