ROBOTS, ALIEN WARS, TERRORISM AND IMPERIAL INTRIGUE IN THE FAR FUTURE!

Aaron is the son and great-grandson of Imperial Knights: fearsome warriors and great captains of the Empire who have led resurgent Imperial armies to reclaim worlds long lost in the aftermath of the Great War a hundred centuries before.

The young man travels with his restless twin sister Maxima to a distant world, to the great chapterhouse fortress of a renowned Military Order, to follow in the footsteps of their father and great-grandfather, to claim his own place as an Imperial Knight.

Black Space was the reality on which space travel relied. It was the emptiness between the stars and paradoxically the endless paths between worlds, never failing to crowd out all thought the first time it was encountered by a mortal human mind.

What if?

The question was as imprecise, as immense as Black Space itself; it had an uncertain, wondrous beginning but failed to find an end: What if?

“The stars are gone,” Maxima whispered.

It was true. They might as well have been in a tunnel, some place else, some place alone. If the innumerable stars of the Galactic Core, if the wheels of distant galaxies, if everything that was familiar was unseen, how certain could they be that those things were actually still there and that nothingness was an optical illusion?

“We are travelling so fast that light cannot reach us,” he told her, not certain whether he believed it himself.
